

Lorna MacEachern, MA, BA (Psychology), McGill University

For over 10 years Lorna MacEachern has been helping graduate students and postdoctoral scholars in a wide variety of disciplines to find meaningful careers. She has presented at professional conferences and been a guest speaker at numerous academic conferences and meetings. After obtaining her MA in Counselling Psychology, Lorna began her career at McGill University as a Career Counselor for graduate students and postdoctoral scholars. She then joined the Office for Postdoctoral Affairs at Yale University, where she established a new career service for postdocs. Lorna is currently in the Faculty of Graduate and Postdoctoral Studies at McGill University, where she is developing a network of tools and programming (collectively referred to as myPath) to help PhD students create an Individual Development Plan (IDP).
